For just over four decades, the former main terminal of Greater Pittsburgh International Airport was the city's gateway to the world. Located nearly 20 miles west of Downtown Pittsburgh, the Joseph Hoover designed terminal would see millions of travelers pass through its doors. Known best for the terrazzo compass in the main lobby, the terminal had many other distinguishing features. The well landscaped entrance that led up to the curved stepped design of the terminal. Each level of the terminal would extend out further than the other allowing for numerous observation decks. The most popular observation deck, the "Horizon Room", was located on the fourth floor.
